Q: weird error when trying to reference a django model field in the shell It's been a while since I worked with python. I started a new job, and i'm trying to work with django for the first time and I'm coming across something weird. I'd appreciate any help. # this is a simplified version of my code class Photo(models.Model): picture = models.ImageField(upload_to="pic_") now i am trying to reference my image field in the shell and get something weird like: #> >> foo.pic.url TypeError: 'ImageField' object is not iterable #> >> foo.pic >> foo.pic >>> foo.pic.url u'foo.pic' # or, if you prefer the named syntax: >>> foo.pic.url u'foo.pic' I understand the output of this to mean that the model field (or other object) has an attribute url. It's just that you're using the wrong notation to access that attribute. A: [Molecular characterization of an unusual variant of Klebsiella pneumoniae (ST80) isolated from a clinical sample]. An unusual variant of Klebsiella pneumoniae (ST80) with intrinsic gentamicin resistance, which was isolated from a clinical specimen, was shown to be identical to the reference strain, KpSchö37, by means of biotyping and biochemical tests. The CTX-M-encoding gene was detected in both the reference strain and the variant with allele profiles of (-->CA-->CAGACAGGAAGTGCCAGTTG, 3252 (G-->A, 12)) and (-->CA-->CAGCCAG

Coronavirus could cause disaster for medical staff Paul Johnston "Fingers crossed it doesn't bite", says nurse Pamela McHugh, who is on the front line of patients suffering from coronavirus. Picture by Paul McGovern The effects of coronavirus could be devastating for medical staff, warns Paddy Manning. In an article for the Irish Independent newspaper, the associate medical director of the Irish Medical Organisation (IMO) said there was a risk that it could be the "scourge that we don't really want" for some patients. "It's one of the scourges that we don't really want to deal with. It is a nasty virus. It comes with secondary complications like pneumonia which we all fear. "We are hoping that it won't be the disease that hits out and kills everyone. That would be a dreadful thing to have to deal with," he said. The IMO expressed the hope that it would spare thousands of patients across the country who are currently being treated and who are in a high-dependency unit in Northern Ireland. Mr Manning says that the virus may affect patients with underlying conditions, like cancer, heart disease and respiratory problems. It has been linked to cases of pneumonia and acute respiratory syndrome (ARDS), where the lungs become inflamed and fill with fluid. He said the virus was treated at a different level to other types of pneumonia. "This virus is nasty. It's a virus that is mildly infectious. "It is highly contagious. It doesn't look like pneumonia or very much like flu. It is looking more like a severe cold or severe cold that is going to turn. "It may come in cases as a mild cold and it may be kept secret. It may be severe and people may seek treatment for something as mild as a cold but it can become secondary pneumonia. "We are doing everything we can to contain this virus to avoid it becoming a scourge that we don't want. "If it does, we need to be ready to contain it so that it doesn't turn into a real disaster and kill thousands." Much of the work carried out by health workers such as Mr Manning is to prevent those in the vulnerable groups affected by the virus from being injured or harmed, such as
