A multi-institutional study of persistent sinus bradycardia in children after congenital heart disease repair. Persistent sinus bradycardia (PSB) is a common complication after surgical correction of congenital heart disease (CHD) in children. The aim of this study was to investigate the risk factors and outcome in patients with PSB after CHD repair. A total of 2355 children who had undergone CHD repair between 2007 and 2012 were included. Sinus bradycardia was defined as heart rate ≤ 60 beats/minute. Follow-up was achieved in 97.3% (2311 of 2355) of the patients at least once. A total of 96 (4%) patients (72 boys and 24 girls) with PSB were included into this study. One-, 3-, and 5-year cumulative freedom from PSB was 98.2%, 88.7%, and 74.1%, respectively. Clinical risk factors were identified in 25 children with PSB. Persistent sinus bradycardia correlated significantly with pulmonary artery (PA) banding, female sex, and PA index greater than 2.0. The use of at least one of these parameters, PA banding, at the time of the initial surgery predicted PSB at follow-up. Logistic regression analysis revealed that PA banding [odds ratio (OR) 22.4; 95% confidence interval (CI) 3.5-139.7; $p = 0.001$] and female sex (OR 4.8; 95% CI 1.2-18.8; $p = 0.027$) were independent risk factors for PSB. After PA banding, females (OR 3.6; 95% CI 1.4-9.0; $p = 0.005$) and PA index > 2.0 (OR 5.1; 95% CI 1.3-20.0; $p = 0.017$) were independent risk factors for developing PSB. The risk of PSB increased 1.5-fold in children with PA banding and 2.3-fold in children with female sex and PA index > 2.0 . The risk of developing PSB is high in children with PA banding and female sex. It is advisable to perform cardiac pacemaker insertion in these children. What's New In Photoshop CC?

Novel upregulation of T-lymphocytes and thymocytes in end-stage renal failure. Immunological abnormalities are often observed in dialysis patients, which can be explained by various factors such as abnormal immune status, overuse of pharmaceutical agents, or adverse effects of dialysis. However, the direct effect of dialysis on T-lymphocyte compartment remains unclear. In the present study, the lymphocyte subpopulation in the peripheral blood and thymus of end-stage renal failure (ESRF) patients was evaluated by flow cytometry. The results showed that the percentage of T-lymphocyte-associated subsets - CD3, CD4, CD8 and natural killer (NK) cells - and B-lymphocytes were not markedly different between the ESRF patients and controls ($P > 0.05$). However, a significant difference was observed in the proportion of T-lymphocytes (CD3) and thymocytes between the ESRF patients and controls ($P = 0.0031$). Furthermore, the NK and B cell proportions were significantly increased in ESRF patients ($P = 0.0195$ and $P = 0.0115$, respectively). The level of T-lymphocytes (CD3 and CD4) and thymocytes was negatively correlated with the duration of renal disease ($r = -0.391$, $P = 0.002$; $r = -0.352$, $P = 0.002$; $r = -0.327$, $P = 0.0047$). In conclusion, the increased T-lymphocyte compartment in dialysis patients may represent T-lymphocyte activation in the dialysis process. Q: Text lines are not aligning.
