November 4, 2019 420 ml of alberts easy activator - is it too thick? I have to make a base for my coffee and i want to use very simple, easy and cheap ingredients (about $1 a bottle). I think that 420 ml of alberts easy activator should be thick enough for me to be happy with my first attempt. Do you think? Thanks, Re: 420 ml of alberts easy activator - is it too thick? Weighing out the required volume will enable you to make up your co-extract with the required concentration of activator. For the "mass" of 420 ml this is 2x 30g of substance = 60g If you use acetone, the ratio of activator to extract will be (840 ml in) / (60 g in) = 1.4 + 1.4 = + 90ml If your extract was 1:1 activator to extract then the required volume will be around 2x 30g = 60g in + 60g in = 0.3x 60g in = 18ml Therefore, the required amount will be 0.3x 60g in = 18ml in = 1.86ml per each 30g extract Similar logic for 1:5 activator to extract. This means that the required amount of activator will be 1.8ml per 30g of activator = 420ml It should be noted that the above is only an approximation as the concentration will vary depending on the method of extraction. A new endoscopic, physiological method for evaluating the postauricular branch of the vagus nerve in human cadavers. The postauricular branch of the vagus nerve is the first to pass into the skull, making it a subject of particular interest. Previous studies have suggested the possible utility of a new method of examining this structure using a pneumo-manometry system under endoscopic control. The aims of the present study were to assess the intra- and inter-observer repeatability of the new method, and to examine whether its results were
