Retinal and choroidal neovascularization (CNV) are the most common and severe complications of age-related macular degeneration (AMD). The therapy of exudative AMD is based on factors such as gender, visual acuity, neurosensory retinal detachment, and laser-induced CNV. In this review, we discuss the differences in therapy of wet AMD depending on these factors. Therapeutic options are presented, including the photodynamic therapy, antivascular endothelial growth factor therapy, the immune therapy, and the transpupillary thermotherapy.
